Stephanie, PT, DPT, recently joined a state-of-the-art private practice. She and her team work like a well-oiled machine and are known for improving patients’ quality of life.

When the practice owner suggests that Stephanie bill her last 30-minute treatment session as a 1-hour session, she’s unsure of what to do. “Excellent care deserves compensation,” he explains. “Besides, it more accurately reflects what the practice should be paid and ensures that we can serve more patients who need us.”

Listening to the practice owner, in this situation, could land Stephanie in big trouble.

Could the government view any of your billing practices as fraud, abuse, or waste?

The health care payment system is complex. The gap between what we know and what we ought to know about compliance, documentation, fraud, and abuse is expanding.

It’s time to bridge the knowledge gap—what you don’t know CAN hurt you.

Program integrity efforts have intensified to find and stop bad actors. Thousands of honest, well-intentioned practitioners are getting caught up in the government’s wide net.

APTA is committed to helping you ensure that you’re not one of them.
